Lee Chapter Reception.
Lee Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, will give a reception this afternoon from 5 to 7 o'clock at the Confederate Woman's Home, 3 East Grace Street, to the members of the General Assembly and their wives and daughters. It will be very interesting and pleasing, and Chesterfield and Richmond Chapters, United Daughters of the Confederacy, as well as the members of Lee and Pickett Camps with their wives, have also been invited. Officers of the chapter, assisted by the officers of Lee Auxiliary will receive the guests, and the rooms will be prettily decorated in Confederate flags and red and white flowers.

At 4 o'clock, immediately prior to the reception, the historical meeting of Lee Chapter will be held at the home. Mrs. Langhorne's "Recollections of Richmond during the late War" will be read by one of the members, and a charming musical program will be rendered.

HUSBAND SPENT EVERYTHING

In An Effort to Bring Wife's Troubles to End, and Finally Succeeds

Myra, Ky.—Mrs. Sarah Brauham, of this town, gives out the following statement for publication: "I am 37 years of age, and suffered untold agony with womanly troubles for 11 years. For 7 years I was all run down, and was told that I could not live. My husband spent everything he had, but I got only temporary relief.

A merchant recommended Cardul, the woman's tonic, to my husband, and he got me 5 bottles at one time. I began taking it, and before the first bottle was gone I began to feel better. I took all of the 5 bottles, and I am to-day as sound and well as any woman, and fat and hearty."

Such testimony as the above, which is given unsolicited, speaks for itself. Can't you see, lady reader, that you are doing yourself, your family, your friends, an injustice by not, at least, trying Cardul, if you suffer from any of the many ailments so common to women?

Cardul is composed of pure, harmless, vegetable ingredients, which act in a gentle, natural way on the weakened womanly organs, helping build them back to permanent strength and health.

Cardul has helped thousands of other women. Why not you? Ask your druggist. He knows about Cardul.

Wright-Gilchrist.
Wilmington, January 28.—One of the most fashionable weddings of the season was solemnized in the First Presbyterian Church on Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock, when Miss Eleanor Gilchrist, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gilchrist, became the bride of Thomas C. Wright, the ceremony being performed by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Wells, D. D.

Preceded by the little ribbon girls, Beverly Northrop, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Northrop, and Josephine Metts, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. J. VanB. Metts, the bride party entered to the strains of the "Wedding March" from "Lohengrin" in the following order: Miss Ella Brand, the first bridesmaid, followed by the groomsmen and bridesmaids as follows: C. McD. Davis and Robert Strange; Misses Elise Kidder and Sue Northrop; J. VanB. Metts and R. A. Williams; Misses Florrie Northrop and Cynthia Rountree, and Laurence Wright and George Gilchrist.

Then came the bride's sister, Miss Jennie Gilchrist, maid of honor, followed by the bride and her father, who gave her away. The groom and his best man, Pembroke Jones, of New York, met the bride in front of the altar.

Following the ceremony, the bride party went to the home of the bride's parents, where a reception was tendered. They left at 6:45 o'clock on the northbound train for New York, whence they will sail Saturday for Naples. Upon their return to this city they will make their home here.

CHAMBERLAIN HAS NO RIGHT TO EARLDOM

Its Possession by Viscount Gormanston Stands in Way of His Elevation.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

"BURKE'S PEERAGE," and other equally authoritative standard works of reference, concede to Viscount Gormanston possession of the Irish barony of Birmingham. This stands in the way of the elevation of Joseph Chamberlain to the House of Lords as Earl of Birmingham, on his retirement from the representation of the city of Birmingham in the House of Commons.

The cable dispatches in alluding to the letter which he has just addressed to his constituents, announcing his retirement from the House of Commons, likewise mentions the impending bestowal upon him of an earldom of Birmingham.

Now it is a long established rule that no one on his elevation to the peerage should adopt a title that is already in use, or even that has belonged in the past to a family still in existence. Thus, when the late William E. Gladstone was offered by Queen Victoria the peerage of Birmingham, he declined it, providing that he could call himself Earl of Liverpool—his native city, and where his family had been established for generations—the then Lord Hawkesbury opposed the project, on the ground that the earldom of Liverpool had last belonged to his maternal grandfather, and that he looked for its eventual revival in his own person. The Grand Old Man did not venture to combat this contention by Lord Hawkesbury, and stated that, since he could not become Earl of Liverpool, he preferred to remain in the House of Commons as plain William Ewart Gladstone, the most illustrious commoner of his day. A number of years afterwards, the late Lord Hawkesbury was raised by King Edward to the earldom of Liverpool.

Lord Curzon, the former Viceroy of India, on being raised to the peerage, did not venture to adopt the title of Lord Curzon, until he had obtained the permission of the Earl of Howe, who is the head of the house of Curzon, and whose minor titles include both a barony and a viscounty of Curzon.

Lord Gormanston might, if appealed to by Joseph Chamberlain, in a similar fashion, be willing to accord to him the permission to adopt the title of Earl of Birmingham, were it not that his rights to the barony of Birmingham have frequently been questioned by genealogical experts. These claim that the barony of Birmingham was assumed by the late Viscount of Gormanston, so long Governor of Tasmania. The late Lord Gormanston appropriated it on the ground that the first Lord Gormanston, that is to say, the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, under King Richard II., had married Margaret, daughter of Walter de Birmingham.

Walter de Birmingham's peerage, however, was not a barony of Birmingham, but a barony of Athlery, which, until the death in the thirteenth century of Thomas Birmingham, twenty-second Baron of Athlery, and also Earl of Louth, was the premier barony of Ireland, antedating that of Kinsale by a number of years. On the death of this Thomas Birmingham, the only heirs in the male line of succession were the descendants of a younger son of Richard Birmingham, sixteenth Lord Athlery. These were John Birmingham, of Dalgan, and of Clondragan, and Captain John Birmingham, of Ashgrove and Ballintava, who were cousins.

John Birmingham, of Dalgan, made an effort to obtain the family honors by proving his descent. But as the procedure required to establish the rights to such honors before the Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords is terribly expensive, having amounted in some instances to $100,000, and even to $150,000, he allowed the matter to drag on until his death without issue in 1802. That left his cousin, Captain John Birmingham, of Ashgrove, above mentioned, as sole heir. He was an officer of the Seventh Fusiliers, and had served as A. D. C. to the Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria. He made up his mind that the expense was too great to establish his rights to the barony of Athlery, all the more as there were no estates going with the peerage, and preferred the life of an Irish country gentleman. His son, Thomas Lynch Birmingham, was equally indifferent to the domain of Edmund Lynch Birmingham, who died without male issue, in 1873, at his place, Wood View, in Galway, the last of the ancient house of Birmingham in the male line. I may add that he left a sister, whose son, the Rev. Father Hugh Kelly, is rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Streator, Illinois.

Now when the late Lord Gormanston, with the approval of Burke's "Peerage," and other analogous works of reference, appropriated the peerage of Walter de Birmingham, on the ground of the marriage of the latter's only child and heiress to the first Lord Gormanston in the fourteenth century, he should have taken Walter de Birmingham's barony of Athlery. If he had succeeded in establishing his claim thereto, he would have become premier baron of Ireland. But he manifestly feared a legal encounter with Lord Kinsale, who is premier baron, once before, and the Athlery peerage is supposed to be extinct.

Nor is Lord Gormanston the only peer who could object to Joseph Chamberlain styling himself Earl of Birmingham. The Earl of Dudley, former Governor-General of Australia, might likewise lodge a protest, since he includes among his minor dignities a barony of Ward of Birmingham.

Charles Murray Marling, who has been designated as the successor of Lord Curzon, in the role of minister plenipotentiary of Great Britain in Mexico, was the cause of an extraordinary and well-known unique reproach addressed by the King Edward to the now deposed Shah, prior to the latter's dethronement.

When Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, now ambassador at Washington, was forced by illness to return home to England, Lord Curzon, some five years ago, he left Marling to direct the affairs of the legation there, as charge d'affaires. Marling distinguished himself by extending his protection to a number of Constitutionalists, who had sought refuge with their wives and children in the grounds of the legation, from massacre by the Shah's troops.

Thereupon the Shah addressed a personal dispatch to Edward VII., making bitter complaint to the effect that Marling was interfering in the internal affairs of Persia, inviting his chief-makers into the legation, and allowing the latter to become a refuge for evil-doers. "In these circumstances," he added, "I ask Your Majesty, my good and exalted brother, unofficially, and in a friendly manner, to put a stop to these grossly improper acts of your charge d'affaires, and send in his stead a competent and accomplished minister."

To this King Edward, who was always noted for punctilious courtesy, replied by telegram over his own signature, as follows: "The statement of Your Majesty that my charge d'affaires is inviting mischief-makers to the legation, is the direct contrary of the truth. I have no interest or desire to intervene in any way in the internal affairs of your country. The conduct, however, of your troops in surrounding my legation, and in arresting those who come out, is an indignity which I will not tolerate, and unless steps are immediately taken to put an end to the situation, my government will be compelled to take measures to vindicate the honor of my flag. I have every confidence in the prudence and good faith of my charge d'affaires."

At the same time the King caused Marling to be notified that he had bestowed upon him the Order of St. Michael and St. George, in token of his satisfaction.

The result of this was that the troops around the legation were at once withdrawn, the Prime Minister tendered in the name of his sovereign an abject apology to Marling for the indignity offered to the legation, while the Shah invited Marling to an audience, at which he received him like a long lost brother, and expressed his profound sorrow that so many weeks had elapsed without his having had the pleasure of seeing him.

Charles Marling, who has also the Order of the Bath, is the second son of Sir William Marling, second baronet of his line, the great wealth of the family being derived from the manufacture of cloth in the Stroud Valley. Charles Marling is married to the daughter of the late General Sir John Slade; and, owing to the childlessness of his elder brother, Colonel Percy Marling, will probably eventually inherit the baronetcy. Colonel Percy Marling, formerly of the Eighth Hussars, won the Victoria Cross under circumstances of exceptional heroism, in connection with the rescue of a wounded soldier, at the battle of Tannenberg, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)
